What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2020?

NEW DELHI: In a first, the Indian government on Monday made public the rules for the registration of people with disabilities. Three years after the Centre declared June 3 as the World Disability Day and started registering people with disabilities through the Social Justice and Empowerment (SJE) Ministry, the government has now announced the National Register of Persons with Disability (NRPWD). The National Disability Registry (NDR) will be a consolidated database of persons with disabilities and will help develop integrated policy, systems, standards and best practices for people with disabilities. According to the new guidelines, all people with disabilities will be assigned a unique ID number, which will be universal and enable them to receive services and benefits irrespective of their disability status and location. The new guidelines also provide for registration of family members of persons with disabilities. All persons with disabilities, their families and caregivers will be registered through the NDR. The guidelines were issued in December 2017. "It is envisaged that the NDR will be a comprehensive registry for persons with disabilities where key demographic information such as name, date of birth, sex, location, disability category, address of the disabled person, and known/identified information about the family members and caregivers will be provided," it says. The Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment has also issued age and gender-specific sample forms, which can be downloaded from the ministry website to facilitate registration in the NDR. The forms will be further used for issuance of identity cards and other documents related to disability and registration of caregivers of persons with disabilities. A toll-free number, 0922-2436813, will also be operationalised for registration of people with disabilities. A new method for measuring the energy distribution function in localized vibrational states of a polyatomic molecule. A novel method is developed for measuring the transition matrix element for dephasing the initial vibrational state of a polyatomic molecule. The experimental approach is based on measuring the degree of saturation of a parametrically driven transition between two bands of the same vibrational state as the excitation laser is scanned through the lasing transition. The method was applied to the 1-2-0 band of HCl and used to probe the energy distribution function of the quantum excitation in the ground state.
