If you're new to Photoshop and can work with it only with a mouse, then CS6 is not the right program for you. You also have to purchase a copy of Office separately for Mac OS X. When a word appears in a web address, it's referring to the program Word. Many Macintosh users don't realize that they have to pay a separate licensing fee for Office. There's a similar issue with Excel and its Excel for the Mac application. You have to purchase a copy of Excel separately from Microsoft for Mac OS X. Similarly, PowerPoint does use a different GUI on a Mac than on a PC. Many people new to the Mac choose to stick with using Microsoft Office on a PC because they're familiar with it. And if you have a Mac laptop, you can use the free version of PowerPoint on your Mac. Access to Microsoft Office is fairly easy to obtain. Many home and business users already have a license to use Office with their computers. For example, if your computer is running Microsoft Windows XP, you can run Office 2003, 2004, or 2007. Many computers, including new ones, already come with Office

Q: Convert SQL to LINQ Hey, I have a SQL query that looks like this: SELECT CASE WHEN a.TransDate = a.BookedDate THEN a.TodaysPrice Else a.FutureDatePrice END FROM AllTickets a WHERE a.AccountId IN (123456) I'm a little confused as to how to convert this to LINQ. My only thought is that I need to create a group of tickets that have an accountId of 123456 and then project them into the first select or second select. a.AccountId IN (123456) a.TransDate = a.BookedDate AllTickets a WHERE a.AccountId IN (123456) Please help! A: a.AccountId IN (123456) a.TransDate = a.BookedDate //Select for all tickets var allTickets = (from a in AllTickets where a.AccountId == 123456 select a).ToList(); //Select for tickets with current date var tickets = (from a in allTickets where a.TransDate == a.BookedDate select a).ToList(); But you should rather go with business-validated queries. The query that you wrote here is potentially not correct. Please have a look at the model and data annotations to see what data the model is based on. And you should use @Html.ActionLink() instead of @Html.ActionLink("LinkText", "Action"). #!/bin/bash # Runs tests on all the hosts using agentlinux. # The output of each test is written to stdout or stderr for each # host, set -e # Skip tests that build by default: for dir
