Lymphocele is a complication of lymph node dissection. This complication occurs in 12% of cases, and is the most common complication in breast cancer surgery. The most popular treatment for this complication is surgical marsupialization of the cyst. The aim of this study was to evaluate the success of marsupialization for the treatment of symptomatic lymphocele. From September 1990 to April 2000, 30 patients with breast cancer who developed symptomatic lymphocele were treated with marsupialization. All patients had distention of the surgical wound, and pain, edema, and lymphocele measured by sonography. On clinical examination, the mean size of the lymphocele was 18 mm. For diagnosis, a lymphogram was performed in 29 patients, and 27 of these showed reflux of contrast into the lymphocele. When the lymphocele was asymptomatic, marsupialization was performed. When the lymphocele was symptomatic, marsupialization was performed after local compression of the wound with cottonoid material. All 30 patients were followed up for a mean period of 33 months. The postoperative pain was significantly decreased. The cosmetic result was good or excellent in 27 patients. The mean size of the lymphocele was 12.6 mm postoperatively. The overall success rate of marsupialization of symptomatic lymphocele was 100%. A good cosmetic result was achieved in 83.3% of the patients. Lymphography is mandatory to determine the success of marsupialization of symptomatic lymphocele.Vegetarian. History. Food. Main menu Post navigation Vegan "Poultry"
