The acute oral toxicity of sesame oil, used in the farming of cattle, and the mustard oil, used in the dressing of sheep, was determined by feeding (2.5 ml kg⁻¹) to male albino mice (Mus musculus) over a range of concentrations. Both oils caused immediate death at all concentrations tested. By contrast, the sheep oil was more acutely toxic than the sesame oil, causing 50% death in animals after just two minutes when dosed at 3 ml kg⁻¹ and in five minutes when dosed at 2.5 ml kg⁻¹. The acute oral toxicity of the mustard oil was also determined over a range of concentrations. This oil produced 100% death after four minutes of exposure to a concentration of 4 ml kg⁻¹. The sheep oil, which is cheaper than mustard oil, was more acutely toxic to sheep than the mustard oil, causing death in sheep after five minutes with 3 ml kg⁻¹ and six minutes with 2.5 ml kg⁻¹.
