Views Most AutoCAD views can be re-configured, so that a drawing can be displayed from different perspectives, such as by viewing a drawing from all sides at once or by showing the drawing from different parts of a 3-D model. Some views are also limited in that they can only be shown as a 2-D drawing in a 2-D context, or in a 3-D context in a 2-D projection. This functionality is commonly used for working with models in the context of a 2-D drawing. AutoCAD views can be saved with an extended set of properties. View properties, such as scale, rotate and angle, can be saved to a DWG and can be made permanent. Drawing view properties can also be saved to a DWG. Vector views are lists of objects and lines, and are typically used to work with a number of individual lines or a series of drawings on a 2-D surface. A vector view is automatically updated when the associated objects in the drawing are modified. Vector views are saved with a set of properties, which include the view name, the view name in non-picture format (view title), the view title in non-picture format, and a set of View Properties. Vector views can be updated on the fly, and the updated view can be saved as a named view. Vector views can be saved to a named view, and the saved view can be opened with a new name.
