China is going to hell in a handbasket in a matter of months unless it changes its tune on foreign-ownership rules for state-owned companies, former German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder said. Schroeder, a fan of Chinese-style capitalism and a leading proponent of China's integration into the global economy, warned on Tuesday that Beijing could soon face shortages of key resources as a result of its "one-size-fits-all" approach to ownership of state-owned companies. "They are going to crash and burn," he told a Beijing audience. "It will be a disaster for them, too, but not in my lifetime. So I think I can also be a bit optimistic about this." China's authorities are trying to persuade major state-owned companies that have had problems in the past two years, including bankruptcies of industrial giants like China Everbright (Chinadaily.com.cn) and China Metallurgical Corp. (MECC, or MeeChew), to become less nationalistic and restructure their company structure to be more market-oriented. The central government is also stepping up efforts to attract foreign capital. Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao visited the United States in July, where he met with the chairman of Goldman Sachs (NYSE:GS), Lloyd Blankfein, and urged the New York firm to expand business in China, where it already has a major presence. Schroeder, who is on a three-day
