The mechanisms of arterial injury during carotid endarterectomy (CEA) are unclear. Recent reports suggest a central role of instrumentation, with others attributing pathogenesis to manipulation during vessel exposure. Our objective was to describe arterial injury in a consecutive series of CEA and to determine the relative contribution of different factors to the injury rate. The charts of 399 consecutive patients who underwent CEA between January 1, 1998, and July 1, 1998, were retrospectively reviewed. Intraoperative arterial injury was defined as injury to internal carotid artery (ICA), external carotid artery (ECA), or both, related to the surgical procedure. Patient and surgical variables were compared using standard statistical analysis and logistic regression. Thirty-six patients (9%) had arterial injuries of the ICA or ECA. The injury rate was 9% and 2% for ICA and ECA, respectively. All ICA injuries were related to the ICA itself, and all ECA injuries were related to the ECA. History The site was originally for a dairy farm, but it was sold to Batavia Land, later Stahelin, in 1917. In 1923 they planned to expand the golf course, but due to the Great Depression, construction did not start until May 1937. The original design consisted of nine holes, but in 1941 more holes were added. The original clubhouse has been renovated and expanded several times since, and the addition of the Stonehenge Clubhouse in 1979 is the most recent. Design Swan Valley has an "anti-gravity" feature, so the course aligns with the local topography. The course has four sets of tees, although they are mowed one different for each. Clubhouse and Golf Shop The course's original main building is the clubhouse, which was built in 1937. The clubhouse is two levels and contains two reception rooms, a game room, a dining room, a lounge, two bars, a pro shop, a food pantry, and restrooms on the lower level. The Stonehenge Clubhouse was added in 1979. The 14,000 sq.ft. clubhouse is open air with a roof and stone facade. It contains an 18-hole, par 72 golf course. It contains a bar, restaurants, a bocce court, a putting green, a driving range, a golf shop, and restrooms on two floors. Course The course measures for men and for women. The par is 72.
