A child centered game that follows the story of three children (including their father), who are faced with death during a time of war. Inspired by ages and ages of stories and games, and driven by a story that was meant to be told to children. The Exaggerated Epoch of Edward O'Hare is a humorous, action-adventure adventure game with third person action and its narrative that envelopes the 3 main characters. In this game, it is impossible to control the moment, or the dice that seem to be stuck in the air of a children's imagination. This game gives the players freedom to create and explore a plethora of 3D worlds with a variety of different characters to interact with. Gameplay The Exaggerated Epoch of Edward O'Hare has a variety of weapons and puzzles to solve for players to create their own experiences. Some of the weapons are used for quick attacks and puzzle solving, while others are used to solve obstacles that may impede them. As they play, they will unlock weapons which are used to interact with puzzles and enemies. The Exaggerated Epoch of Edward O'Hare is divided into 3 main parts. The first part takes place in Edward's young childhood, with side characters from his family. This section of the game showcases the action of the game, with interactions between the 3 main characters. The second part takes place at Edward's young adulthood, as he realizes his mistakes and slowly puts the pieces of his shattered life back together. The final part takes place at Edward's older adulthood, as he re-learns to smile and embrace a new family life. In his final years, Edward comes to terms with his children and grandchildren and takes another chance at life. Plot The Exaggerated Epoch of Edward O'Hare, takes place in Edward's younger, more idyllic life as an aspiring novelist, bartender and family man. His son Alex is a young toddler, and Edward's grandson Colin was just born. Edward loves to write and spend time with his family and friends. He's been keeping a journal since he was a kid. Edward's life is threatened when a group of teenagers enter his home. Tied up, they are forced to survive the night in a locked, upstairs room. Edward dreams of something pulling him out of his room and into another world. He discovers that his trouble is no dream, but a fantasy that his son Alex takes him into. Alex is taking care of Edward

He said "I haven't had any tea at this bar, i am not really clear of the men who just walked in" The girl felt a twitch in her heart and then it faded away, no need to worry. He came here to drink tea and make a few arrangements that needed to be made. "It's no problem, we will call the police then", she said, knowing that a simple call might not cut the wood off her shoulders. The young girl hurried away. Three hours later A flurry of cops, medics, and even reporters. Everyone searching for a magician at work? Densha finally arrives with a very accurate description of the black knight. The medics were here for the job, a young girl, white knife in hand and a few blood drops left on their prints.
