I implemented this algorithm in a way that it takes, for every point in time, the available stock information and all required data in order to calculate the next price change with a given probability of success, depending on the volatility of the stock price. This means the algorithm is time-expensive, as it should, to test, as calculating the price change takes some time. Now, as I have already implemented the algorithm, it only makes sense to calculate the resulting trading activity and the time, so that I can draw a graph which compares the time performance of the algorithm with "legitimate" strategies, such as "simulated market orders" and "simulated limit orders". So, the question is: how do I calculate and draw the time cost for a trading program of stock market? Is it as simple as "let the algorithm run and calculate the best price change", then measure the time it took to calculate that? I use Anaconda Python 2.7 and scala. Thank you very much for your help! Best Ariel A: Numerical Python (numpy & scipy) can be used to do this, and there is a nice function to run a simulation using an integrator (integrate and time). For example, you can use the same function to compare different trading algorithms: from scipy.integrate import solve_bvp time_cost = [] simulated_time_cost = [] algorithms = ['simulated_market_orders','simulated_limit_orders'] for a in algorithms: a_alg = a() a_result
