Extract the files in a folder with.exe suffix. Run the setup file using an.exe suffix. Extract the files from the [crack] folder to [Setup Install] folder. Run Setup.exe to install the program. Download link: Etiologies and outcomes of young children with hemoglobinopathy. This study was done to determine the etiologies, health-related outcomes, and morbidity of young children with hemoglobinopathies in Taiwan. A total of 1497 children with hemoglobinopathies born from 1985 to 1993 were enrolled in this study. The medical records of these children were retrospectively analyzed to identify the etiologies, and the parents completed a questionnaire concerning the health-related outcomes and morbidity of their children. Chi-square and Fisher's exact tests were used for statistical analysis. Morbidity was found in 486 children (32.3%), and there were no significant differences in morbidity between children with sickle cell disease and those with other hemoglobinopathies (P =.439). Sickle cell disease was the most common cause of hemoglobinopathy in this study, followed by thalassemia. Sixty-five children (4.2%) died during the study period, and there were no significant differences in mortality among children with hemoglobinopathy. The average age of death was 3.6 years. Neonatal cyanosis, severe anemia, and decreased iron concentration in the liver were found to be significantly associated with the mortality rate. Patients with sickle cell disease were more likely to have more acute complications and sickle cell crises than patients with other hemoglobinopathies (P
