When a Government's Too Big To Be Responsible As the federal budget deficit swells to $1.3 trillion, the federal government now spends more than it takes in and the politicians and propagandists are trumpeting the importance of "paying down the deficit." Never mind that the best and only way to reduce the deficit is to reduce spending and increase revenue. If government spending is pushed too far, it will have to pay the consequences. Federal government spending is already dangerously high, growing from $1.1 trillion in 2001 to $1.3 trillion today.
That's nearly 18 percent of the national economy. That's a little over twice the size of the entire U.S. economy at the end of World War II. And now it's getting ready to balloon even more. The government is in danger of running out of room. Spending is growing at a staggering rate, as shown in the table at the end of this story. Growth in federal spending is far outpacing growth in federal income, as federal revenues plummet as a percentage of GDP. Indeed, federal spending is growing twice as fast as federal taxes. Federal revenue fell from 28.8 percent of GDP in 2001 to 24.9 percent of GDP in 2005, according to the Congressional Budget Office. And federal spending grew from 23.8 percent of GDP to 27 percent of GDP over the same period. Revenues are down because businesses and individuals are feeling the pinch of the high tax rates and tight federal budgets. They're laying off workers, reducing their use of government services and borrowing money to invest, which reduces their tax receipts. Tax revenues are down because demand for goods and services is down, as the housing and credit crisis plays out. Less demand for products reduces tax receipts. So, a population still at the peak of its earning capacity is fed up with the federal government's budget deficit and spending. At the same time, the federal government, which now spends more than it takes in, can no longer afford its share of federal entitlement programs (or could it, perhaps?). All of this is hurting our economy. Other countries, which are more fiscally responsible than the U.S., are investing their savings in their own currency and making sure MobiZa FileMover 4.30.4.85 [Unlocked] - Buy Now. Laptops with integrated cameras have become the new norm, but one in every three Americans still don't use them at home, according to Harris Poll research. Last year, 20 percent of Americans said they used a computer webcam at home, up from 14 percent in 2013, according to a survey of 2,000 U.S. adults by Harris Poll. Out of the people who said they used a computer webcam at home, 13 percent said they use it "all the time" and eight percent said they used it "sometimes." The most important reason people cited for not using a webcam is that they don't see the need for a camera at home, while the least important reason is that "they are not interested in using a webcam in their home."

Q: Hiding UIPickerView's back button on iPad I have a UIPickerView with an array of 64 elements (there is a lot of logic behind it). I would like to present this view as a modal view. Problem is, when I tap the back button on an iPad, the picker view still comes up, just with the dots over each row. I'm using this code to hide the picker view on my own view controller: - (void) viewWillDisappear:(BOOL)animated { [pickerView resignFirstResponder]; [super viewWillDisappear:animated]; } Is there a way to achieve this? A: Try to do it like this if (!yourViewController.view.hidden) { [yourViewController.view removeFromSuperview]; } [yourViewController.view setHidden:YES]; [yourViewController.view setAlpha:0.0]; or maybe you can implement the UIViewController's method dismissViewControllerAnimated: - (void)dismissViewControllerAnimated:(
