Q&A with Tarnished: INTERVIEW WITH THE DEVELOPER: 1. How did you get into games? I started playing video games when I was about four. I still remember fondly the days when I was playing a game called Donkey Kong. I could never master the controls, but I could sit and play endlessly. When I grew up, I wanted to develop games. I enrolled in a game development school after graduation, but it seemed like the schools were a bit like university admission exams—it's all pretty easy. So I ended up studying at a game development company. After I completed the five-year project, I started working as a game designer. A colleague of mine, who is in charge of business at the game company, gave me the chance to work on a project unrelated to my job (maybe an overthinker). This is how Tarnished first started. 2. Please describe your process in making this game.

Tarnished started as a game that I would think about playing. What made the game special? What made it fun? I had always thought about developing a new type of game, which I called a fantasy action RPG. A fantasy action RPG is a game where you can have both the power of a standard fantasy RPG and a robust weapon action. I had not seen the kind of game I had imagined. So I started to search for the systems, which I thought would be needed for that game. Our main character (Tarnished) and the world that she moves around in are also my own creations. And all the information, such Q: Calling Function with QEMU Sphere on VPS (1.0) I've got a few questions on using QEMU/Sphere. I have a function (called `changeMailApprovalState`) that prints out a part of the header and then does a ZMQ poll/send/receive with another node. The node I'm calling the function from is a VPS, so I must use the Sphere CLI(ssh) to run this. It will be running on a Linux machine. My questions are: 1) If I use the sphere CLI to run my `changeMailApprovalState` function, does it mean that the `changeMailApprovalState` function will be run on the remote VM node or will it run in the sphere? 2) Is there a way to call my function with the sphere CLI, after it's launched? (just as I'm about to call it in the code here) 3) Is the `changeMailApprovalState` actually threaded? A: My questions are: No. QEMU does not have any support for multi-threading, which is what you need to run one instance of the Spheres's function in. Yes. You can use the sphere CLI to run my function, after it's launched. No, it is not threaded.

Hope this helps. Q: Definition of a 'social graph' I am a bit puzzled by the words 'social graph'. Since 'social graph' is a very popular term, I assume it has a fairly standardized meaning. So I would like to know what is commonly interpreted as a 'social graph'? The problems with my current understanding of social graphs is that one may take the idea of a social graph as being too narrow. If we want to see more of an association than a relationship, what shall we include? How about knowledge? My thoughts so far are: social graph = a graph of a large set of people who are somehow connected in a social way (e.g. because they attended some event together, or they work for the same company, or...) social graph = people who are in some sort of contact with each other social graph = a graph of people who know a certain person social graph = people who are interested in the same thing (e.g. the next best travel destination) I hope that this
