Q: ReactJs read external JSON data from a API I'm new to React, and I'm trying to use the API ''. Right now I'm trying to get the 'name' variable to come through, but it doesn't appear to come through. My code is class App extends Component { constructor(props) { super(props); this.state = { name: 'Example' }; } render() { return (Welcome to React This is a paragraph. This is another paragraph. This is yet another paragraph.); } } export default App; Any help would be greatly appreciated! Thanks A: You're passing the name value directly to Header, but you need to send the response data to the props variable : and then you can : this.props.responseData The actual link doesn't send the name key, so you need to send the { id: 123 } format that is actually provided on the API : {this.props.responseData.name} Q: SQL Server Management Studio 14 проблема с опцией поиска Я не � not only the change in the movement of the cool water, but also the change in hydrodynamics of the whole river channel. The change in hydrodynamics could be caused by the friction among the cool water and the less-warm water in the rivers (Figure 5{ref-type="fig"}), the volume of cool water could be reduced. 3.4. Depth Change of Bottom Water {#sec3.4} ---------------------------------- The depth of bottom water (h~b~, m) and the temperature change (ε, K) are significant factors influencing the temperature difference between the top and bottom of the water column (Δ*T*, K). According to previous work,^[@ref13],[@ref20],[@ref22]^ the temperature of bottom water is mainly determined by the difference between the river temperature and the ocean temperature (Δ*T*, K) based on the relation of h~b~ and Δ*T* from the point data of the ocean and the river (Figure 3{ref-type="fig"}). In this study, the temperature of bottom water showed a great difference from the upstream to the downstream in the case of the mixture of the heat discharge zone and the mixture of the heat input zone, while the up- and downstream temperature difference showed no significant difference in the case of the heat input zone. Additionally, the temperature difference between the top and bottom of the water column also displayed the similar pattern to that of the variation in the depth of the bottom water. In terms of the temperature of the bottom water, the temperature of the cool water of the heat discharge zone had a certain difference from the temperature of the river water, while the temperatures of the warm water were almost the same as that of the river water in the heat input zone. According to the water temperature and depth (Figure 5{ref-type="fig"}), the depth of the warm water was the minimum in the heat discharge zone and the depth of the cool water was the minimum in the heat input zone. In addition, as the depth of the warm water was gradually reduced, the depth of the cool water became gradually deeper and the depth of the bottom water increased; the volume of the warm water was replaced by the volume of the cooler water, and the volume of the warmer water was replaced by the volume of the cooler water. Thus, the
