Aberrations in cell-cell interaction underlie the pathogenesis of atherosclerosis, a disease that affects millions of Americans. To the community of cultured cell biologists, the phenomenon of cell-cell adhesion is not understood clearly. This grant proposes to understand the mechanism of cell-cell adhesion in terms of the fundamental problem of the structure of an adhesive junction. The plan is to investigate the molecular events that control the molecular interactions in a developing adhesive junction under shear stress. In order to accomplish this, the dynamics of the membrane and cytoskeleton will be followed with video and photo-intensified microscopy. The molecular interactions will be quantified with fluorescence polarization. We will analyze the rates of membrane and cytoskeletal reorganization, and correlate them with the onset of attachment. In addition, we will correlate this adhesion with the mechanical forces acting on the substrate. These studies will yield a better understanding of the molecular events in the regulation of cell adhesion. A model system has been chosen. During culture of chick fibroblasts on glass or glass-covered silicone rubber, cells assemble both focal contacts and adhesive junctions in response to shear stress. Because the adhesion reaction is only a part of the cell behavior under flow conditions, we will construct a flow cell to study the adhesion of chick cells of varying adhesiveness to glass substrates. We will examine the molecular mechanisms involved in adhesion and
