Nickel surface state and adsorbed pumice were determined by thermogravimetric analysis and temperature-programmed desorption of adsorbates from nickel particles on pumice containing 0.1 M NaOH (HC-V1), acetone (AC), glacial acetic acid (GAA), and water solution (DC). Results demonstrate that the surface is not covered with adsorbed nickel, whereas the adsorbed nickel surface concentration can be reduced by all adsorbing agents. The change in surface state is attributed to pumice pore-filling and/or the electrostatic interaction between the surface and the adsorbing agent. The two-step thermal treatment of adsorbed nickel causes the reduction of initial nickel surface state. The treatments of adsorbed nickel on AC-, GAA-, and water-washed HC-V1 followed by two-step thermal treatment produce the same result. The conclusion is that the surface state of nickel is not dependent on the adsorbed nickel species. Q: Display Base64 string in UIAlertView. Possible?
