There are birds with long feathers, which look like dinosaurs - they're very strange and most unlikely, and they even take care of them. For regular feathered birds, what they look for in partners is a mate, a partner, someone to be faithful to. But what has happened, is that this and that other bird has evolved longer feathers. In the meantime, long feathers have evolved more to keep in close to the birds, like the ostrich, and they've changed to look like the wings of a bird. These are not evolutionarily adapted for keeping close, but because it's dark all around, no one bothered to study this. There are dinosaurs with wings as well, like the pteranodons. Since they were all big, alligators have evolved very big legs, because they live on land. If you still don't get it, go watch a film called Jurassic Park. This has become a confusion
