tombs and headstones? Yes, we are. Dig out some of that desiccated, lichen-covered old bones and try a little crystal meth. Turn your childhood nightmares into some cinematic recensions. Any other tours or events going on? Yes, we are. We have one final scarecrow-making party scheduled for Halloween on the grounds. This will be the only time that anyone outside of the exclusive Circle of Blasphemers can come and sew those ugly little rags into dummies. Anything else we should know? Yes, we are. We are a secret society. It's time to move on.The present invention is directed toward a method and system for assisting a user by turning off a phone, for example. Throughout the years, the need for visually impaired persons to communicate with others has been met by the use of telephones, teleconferencing equipment and other types of communication devices. Because the equipment for a telephone requires the user to have sight, this form of communication may be difficult for the visually impaired person. For example, one way of handling this problem is for the visually impaired person to use a telecommunications device for the deaf and hard of hearing (TDD/DHH). Under such an arrangement, the visually impaired user would be able to talk to another user, while the person for whom the visually impaired user is speaking uses an audio-visual device to view what is being said.

There are two main types of telecommunication devices for the deaf and hard of hearing. The first is a TDD telephone or unit, in which the user, who is visually impaired, sits at a TDD communication desk or post. The TDD telephone at the TDD desk or post c6a93da74d
