Earplugs (standard and earmuffs) can be effective sound-reducing devices, particularly for low-frequency noise (12 Hz and below) (Figure 10). Most earplugs are designed as passive devices, meaning that they allow room for air to move in and out of the ear canal. They fit snugly into the ear canal and block the low-frequency sound waves from entering the ear canal. Earplugs must be fitted properly in the ear to reduce noise. If the earplug does not fit properly in the ear, it will not provide the attenuation needed to protect the worker from noise levels that can cause hearing damage. Earmuffs are designed as active devices, meaning that they actively provide attenuation. Earmuffs are made of foam, fiberglass, leather, and flax. They are typically designed for all sound frequencies except for the lowest frequencies, between 12 and 20 Hz. Safety glasses or goggles are generally worn when working in high-noise environments. They prevent dust and debris from entering the eye, are most effective against combustion-related hazards, are relatively inexpensive, can provide protection from flying particles, and protect against the damaging effects of ultraviolet (UV) radiation. Protective eyewear should be worn whenever there is any probability of being exposed to substances or conditions capable of producing hazardous effects on the eyes (NIOSH). Safety glasses are most effective when they prevent dust and debris from entering the eye and should be well-fitting in order to reduce the transmission of external sound to the eye (OTM/Woodruff). I do make the AeroPress more difficult for myself by using really potent coffee. It is nice to have the total control over the amount of coffee you add into it, and then you can adjust to the level of strength.

1. Do a blind press with boiling water to soak the paper filter.
2. Pour 20 grams of filter ground coffee into the main AeroPress chamber.
3. Pour boiling water to 1 mark on the plunger and wait for 5 seconds.
4. Pour water from the plunger into the main chamber. Circulate water and grounds with a jug underneath, ensuring grounds are wet.
5. Fill water from boiler up to 3 mark on the plunger.
6. 30 seconds after pouring the first water in, pour in the contents of the plunger into the main chamber. Then press firmly until the brewed coffee is extracted into the jug, but stop just before the pppffsstt sound.
7. Serve.

I have been using your recipe, using my Aeropress filter, with fresh-brewed coffee. I haven't had any problems, as I expected from previous postings you'd done, and having read your posts on the topic. I was wondering if this is because my Aeropress is a relatively old model (the one I was given when I joined this forum, more than 2 years ago), or if this is a benefit I'm experiencing simply because I brew the coffee with a filter instead of using a paper filter? 5ec8ef588b
