ummm the whole "tolerance" (be they individuals or groups) thing can go both ways it does not have to be one or the other im a white american woman who works with african americans and they have one of the lowest tolerance rates in america i work with an international group and they have one of the lowest tolerance rates in america when i found out that i was going on a trip to south africa (for 5 years) i was worried about being killed. but my brother came to me and told me "if that can happen to you (going on a trip) then its just a matter of time before it happens to you here" i had to sit back and tell him that there is no way that would happen to me in america. however in sa things happen in a matter of seconds a single black person can kill you over the slightest thing if they dont know who you are also when things happen to you its the same type of people who will come to you, even if you didnt do anything, you will not be safe because you are not an individual so they will come after your family not someone else. you might be right and a man of integrity must act in such a way as to not cause pain in the case of a muslim, however in my opinion i think a person who abuses power should be dealt with the same way even if the power abuser is muslim. keep in mind that police are not always right, they sometimes abuse their power and by asking for tolerance from you they are asking for your sympathy in their abuse of power. furthermore those of you who think this is a rant by a white american woman are full of shit. since i am not muslims do not look to me for support from any muslims nor can i support the beliefs of muslims.

decompression surgery is a treatment option for patients with chiari malformation, syringomyelia, and for those with symptoms that do not respond to other treatments. the procedure is an invasive form of treatment with significant risks. this surgical approach to decompress the pressure of brainstem on the fourth ventricle is commonly used for patients with hydrocephalus from blockage of cerebrospinal fluid or with chiari malformation. sometimes, it pays to ask a dr. for his or her opinion on what to buy. for example, how can a physician and his team help to determine the best parts of a diet, in addition to exercise, to keep a healthy heart? chiari and tonsillar hypertrophy, both due to increased intracranial pressure, compress the cerebellum, fourth ventricle, and brainstem, and may result in the gaze palsy, facial droop, dysphagia, dysarthria, and ataxia. damage to the optic nerve and tract can cause peripheral blindness, visual field defects, and optic atrophy. postoperative infection can occur. seroma, fluid collection, and hematoma may be treated with drainage. chronic pain from cerebellar hemorrhage, new spine instability and deformity, and cerebellar infarction can occur, as well as neurologic complications. pain associated with cerebellar hemorrhage and infarction is usually treatable. the posterior fossa also contains the part of the brain and spinal cord that is involved in balance and equilibrium. for that reason, if there is persistent balance or equilibrium problems that are not caused by any apparent medical condition or accident, there may be a need for correction of the chiari malformation.
