the second component of the cpg program is epa's list of recovered content and accompanying recommendations for recovered content. epa has developed criteria and a process for the designation of recovered content and recommendations for percentage of recovered content for each product. epa published its first list of recovered content and recommendations for percentage of recovered content in the federal register in may of 2005. it is published annually thereafter. epa's recovery recommendations for products include a list of categories of products, the percentage of recovered content for each category of product and the recommended percentage of recovered content for each product in each category. epa developed a testing protocol to determine the percentage of recovered content in each of the products. the product may be the individual product or a composite product such as a chair or window. products that have been tested to date are indicated in the table below by the number that appears in the column of the same name and is preceded by the letter "r." the first two digits following the "r" indicate the year in which the product was tested. for example, a product listed as "1996 r20" was tested in 1996. in addition to the epa's recommendations for recovered content, epa has provided a list of products that have been designated to be produced with recovered content that meets certain levels of the epa's criteria and recommendations. the designated products are grouped by category. you will find the epa's final or proposed recommendations for the designated products listed below on the epa website.
