fundamentally i am a conceptual artist.the goal is notto achieve photo-realism but instead to quickly create compelling 3d concept sketches that appear to have been created by an entire marketing and architectural team. shaderlight is the only rendering software that i have used that can keep up with my workflow and deadlines and has, i believe, elevated the work to another level. unfortunately this means that you will not be able to purchase new licences or upgrades after this time. customers with existing licenses will be able to continue rendering with shaderlight however we are no longer able to offer technical support at any level. in addition, the current version of shaderlight will not be updated to work with the next sketchup version whenever that is released. a simple change in the sketchup materials created this stunning image. when you render an object with a transparent material in sketchup, only the outlines of that object are shown in the 3d scene. to see the interior, you must render the object again with the interior materials turned off. i couldnt quite figure out why the colors were so strange. i suspected a problem with the material itself. i changed the diffuse and emissive color sliders to the exact values of a normal 3d model. when i rendered the image with the shaderlight material preset, the colors were back to normal! i think this will be a powerful tool for quick prototyping. the material presets in shaderlight are very powerful and can be used to create complex materials. in this example, a simple change in the sketchup materials created a stunning image. when you render an object with a transparent material in sketchup, only the outlines of that object are shown in the 3d scene. to see the interior, you must render the object again with the interior materials turned off. i couldnt quite figure out why the colors were so strange. i suspected a problem with the material itself. i changed the diffuse and emissive color sliders to the exact values of a normal 3d model. when i rendered the image with the shaderlight material preset, the colors were back to normal! i think this will be a powerful tool for quick prototyping.
