I was competing with senior architects and in the end, it was the construction and the contract that won it for me. I would like to say a few things about how I learned in the whole process. 1. Know your team. You have to know the team you're working with before you begin. They all have different design styles and you have to understand that. If you don't, you can come to the worst situations, where the team and you are arguing over the way the project was done. 2. Know your materials. Materials are just as important as the design style. You have to know about the materials you're using and know what materials you are going to use. In the end, you have to know what the product will look like when it's finished and that is only possible if you know the materials. 3. Learn about your team. Architecture is a profession where people like to be at the top of their game. They all have to be at their best. They will all share things that they did and show that they are the best. Don't be afraid to ask questions and learn what is going on. 4. Learn from mistakes. You should always be learning from past mistakes, so you can make better ones in the future. You can't do anything perfect the first time, but you can do your best and learn from the mistakes. 5. Learn from your team. It's very important to learn from your team. If they see something that is wrong, they should correct it for you. That is how you can grow as an architect. They are the ones who see the big picture and know the details. You should be humble enough to accept their help. 6. Learn about your
