Dietary habits in anorexia nervosa. A study of a group of women with anorexia nervosa (AN) is reported. The aim of the study was to test whether the present theory of anorexia nervosa which is grounded in biological and psychological data can be applied to patients with AN. The dietary habits of patients with AN (n = 36) were studied and compared with those of a control group of healthy women (n = 36). The control group had on average a lower body weight, and consumed more energy. No differences were found in the intake of protein, carbohydrates, fat, fibre, and vitamins and trace elements. The fact that no differences were found in the intake of nutrients (adherence to "good nutrition") suggests that the patient with AN has a different kind of eating pattern. This lack of adherence to dietary recommendations may be related to the attitudes toward food and nutrition of patients with AN. Such attitudes are probably related to cognitive and emotional factors, that is, to the disorder itself. It was concluded that the eating pattern in patients with AN is not related to nutritional requirements, but is a characteristic feature of the patients.// Copyright (c) 2011 The Chromium Authors.
