If you're going to do so, make sure that the app is .Q: d3.js - How to create node which can be pushed into the graph from an external javascript file? The title may not be very specific, but my problem is similar to the following: In the example in the page "", the page loads an external javascript file which adds nodes to the graph (example script): This data.js file looks like this: var data = [ {name:"Leaf", weight:500}, {name:"Root", weight:500} ]; This works fine, but I need to be able to do it without loading a script from data.js. So I created a new file called "data.js" and I put the lines above inside: var data = [ {name:"Leaf", weight:500}, {name:"Root", weight:500} ]; Then I'm creating the graph and everything works fine, but the nodes are not "pushed into" the graph, because they are not added from data.js. The style is not working. If I put the first two lines in the same file as the third one the style is not working too. What's going on here? A: You need to run this from a browser. The browser has a global environment and you just can't run javascript code directly from files. In any case, if you are using d3js without loading data
