Eukaryotes The eukaryotes are a large group of organisms that contain an enclosed nucleus. They include plants, fungi, protists and animals. Most eukaryotes have complex cell structures (called 'organelles') that are enclosed within the cell membrane. Inside the cell are many small structures called vacuoles. Because they contain DNA, eukaryotes are more complex than prokaryotes. But they are not more complex than the other single-celled organisms, which have a single cell membrane. Many eukaryotes use a different 'nucleus' to store their DNA. This is called a 'nucleus'. Unlike prokaryotes, eukaryotes can create new cells to replace cells that die. Pro
