There are many fields of endeavor where an image input device is preferred. Many, such as security and armored vehicles, would find it beneficial to have an image input device to provide a two-dimensional image to a processing system to search for potential danger or contraband. Other such fields include various types of autonomous robotic and navigational devices, such as vehicles, aircraft, and the like. Still other fields where image input would be beneficial include a number of imaging-based inspection or quality control fields, such as semiconductor manufacturing, circuit board assembly, and the like. There are many commercially available image capture devices that may be used in an image input apparatus. One such commercially available image capture device is a scanning device, such as a digital camera, that captures images of an object or area, stores the image data for review, and then may
